"Yesterday, while we were doing our [GaitAid] practice, he told me something that was very revealing. He said: 'I feel my body is more real. The leg that is usually numb—I can feel it when I am walking. It is like [it is] connected to my body. Do you know what I mean?'"
" Margarita Friedman, wife of patient with Multiple Sclerosis and Parkinson's Disease

"The [clinical trial] results clearly indicate that the [GaitAid] device helps patients with MS control their gait. The degree of improvement is proportional to the degree of impairment. [That is, the more severe the impairment, the better the results with GaitAid.] The results support the potential role of the device as a rehabilitation modality in MS."
